Gary Macleod Post by Gary Macleod » Wednesday 19 May 2021, 22:08 pm That's the thing about music is that we all hear it differently, I like de vitis playing but it's not my favourite. although Bach's Largo and Loure sound good on the violin, the Chaconne does not. But Thorlaksson's arrangement is a good example of why you should always check the original before committing to one. Big Piece. Both guitarists use drop D tuning and play it in F Major. Chaconne = 4 more: II. It is almost as if this piece were written specifically to explore the range and beauty of the guitar. Careful arrangement, adding some bass notes and filling in the chords a little (not too difficult given the clarity of the harmony) can make the piece sound even more idiomatic on the guitar. You'll obviously have to choose your own guitar fingering. He goes on to almost persuade himself that it might have been written for the guitar: "It is not unlikely, moreover, that the Iberian origin of the Chaconne might have suggested to Bach the idea of assigning it to a Spanish instrument, one which his universal curiosity could not ignore, since it had become the fashion in every country of Europe.". Simplest thing to do if you want to try it in Em is transpose a violin Dm version in Musescore. Gigue • V. Sarabande • IV. Unbelievable technique and musicianship. The violin reigns supreme in melodic passages, particularly for long & slow notes where it can extract every last ounce out of emotion by virtue of the fact that it can alter the sound of a note much more substantially than a guitar can.
